27) and the diminutive form of the cognomen ("Crispilla", 159) were largely developments of the next generation. Matho's daughter should be a Pomponia, but we are surprised to hear him call her "Nigra" (186).

There are some flashes of genius in the story that offer a compensating value, as, for instance, the startling scene in which Caesar is attacked with "the falling disease" (199-201), or the description (42 ff.) of Ravenna, Caesar's gubernatorial capital, as a city of the Venice type.

Classical Articles in Non-Classical Periodicals

The preparation of the list of Classical Articles in Non-Classical Periodicals will again be in charge of Professor H. H. Yeames, of Hobart College, Geneva, and Dr. William Stuart Messer, of Barnard College, Columbia University. All readers of THE CLASSICAL WEEKLY are invited to send to Professor Yeames or Dr. Messer or to the Managing Editor titles of such articles, especially of articles they have themselves contributed to various Journals (with some indication of the contents).

To save space a set form should be followed by all contributors. Thus, an entry like (J. C. Stobart, The Glory that was Greece) indicates an unsigned review of the book named; an entry like J. G. Frazer, The Golden Bough (Andrew Lang), indicates a review of Frazer's book by Andrew Lang; an entry like How did Thucydides write Numbers?, J. P. Mahaffy, indicates an article by Mahaffy; an entry like Professor Verrall or Sophocles's Ichneutae means an unsigned editorial or note or comment on the subject indicated. An entry like A Great Greek Statesman = (A. W. Pickard-Cambridge, Demosthenes and the Last Days of Greek Freedom) means that under the caption A Great Greek Statesman has appeared an unsigned review of Mr. Pickard-Cambridge's book. Comments explanatory of titles, meant to give some hint of the nature of the article or note, are given in square brackets.
